Tots To Teens
by Sue Ellen Sullivan

Dear Sue: Please let me use your column to urge parents to be fair to their child care provider. I know first hand how parents can take advantage of us. The most obvious problem is the money. Parents, I know you are working because you need the money, but I am caring for your child because I need the money also. I don't want to hear hard luck stories. I have bills to pay too. You pay me little more than you would a teenage baby sitter and yet you entrust your most precious possession to me for an entire day. Please pay me on time and exactly what you owe me.

Another problem is lateness. You are supposed to pick up your child on the way home from work, not after your shopping is done, or after your dentist appointment. Does it ever occur to you that I may have something to do? Not only do you not offer to pay me extra, but you lie by saying the train was late. Don't you realize that people see you at the store and then mention it to me? Even if you don't care about me, there is your child to consider. They have spent a long day with me and are eagerly awaiting your return. If they can't be sure you will return when you are supposed to, they won't want to be left again tomorrow. Julie A.

Dear Julie: I was once a child care provider, and everything you say is true. I hope parents will see themselves in your letter.

Tony took aim and shot into Philip's bedroll. Wait To See: Beth gets upsetting news.

LOVING: Stevie took the evidence of cocaine from the speaker's case to plant on Ava. Carly found the suitcase of cocaine under Ava's bed and confronted her as federal agents broke into the Bracknell home. Cabot lay in a coma with no certainty of recovery. Shana agreed to take over as president of Aiden Enterprises. A troubled Ralph stalked Shana with a knife. Dane received her from the masked man's attack.
